CARE AND MANAGEMENT OF COWS

How They Should be Fed, Watered to Prevent Milk Fever

ED. HOARD'S Dairyman—Please send me (by letter or through the Dairyman) some practical advice on the care of a dairy cow, and the management of the udder, before and ten days after calving. How should she be fed, watered and salted through this period, to prevent danger of milk fever, or milk sickness?

Have been reading the Dairyman one year, and do not expect to be without it. This is a beef and dual purpose district. I have the only dairy bred bull in a radius of ten miles, and want above information for myself and the patrons of this bull.

R. T. II., Pittsboro, Ind.

When the cow is dry, her food should be chiefly roughage, but rich in protein and ash, for these two elements are necessary to develop the foetus properly. A small allowance, say two pounds of meal daily, will be quite enough and it should be rich in protein, but not in carbohydrates. Bran or oats, or a mixture of bran and oats, together with little meal allowance, makes a very good grain ration for a cow just before calving.

Corn silage or roots is a very good feed to give at this time, for they serve as a laxative and help to keep the cow's system in good condition. Alfalfa and clover hay make splendid dry roughage. A cow at this time should be fed no more roughage than she will eat up clean, to prevent her getting into the habit of eating the most palatable part of the roughage, and wasting much good feed. The cow that is on good pasture, needs no grain or roughage, unless she is thin in flesh, then it is well to feed her liberally. Since the discovery of the air treatment for milk fever, it is not necessary to feed the cow lightly for several weeks previous to calving, but she may be fed well right up to the time of parturition. Sometimes heavy feed or luxuriant pasture will stimulate heavy milking to produce too much milk prior to calving, but such cases are few, and it is usually an animal that is in good condition, and does not need to be fed very much. Occasionally some cows have to be milked before they drop their calves, and there should be no hesitancy in so doing when the fullest milk yield indicates that there is danger of running the udder unless it is relieved.

If the cow is running in good pasture, which is supplied with plenty of shade and fresh water, she needs but little attention until a few days before calving. If she is separate from the other cattle, and is carefully watched by the herdsmen, she may be left in the pasture until she has calved, providing the weather is warm and dry. In cold weather, a comfortable box stall, well bedded, is the place for the cow two or three weeks before she is due to calve. This is a period when good care and a little careful attention can do a good deal.

Care of Cow at Calving Time

If it is in the summer the cow needs but little attention, the attendant should note, however, the condition of the cow, and after the calf is licked dry, it should have strength enough to rise and suck; if it has not, it should be assisted. After the calf has had its allowance, the cow should be milked nearly dry, and if under is in a feverish or caked condition, the cow should be milked frequently and her udder bathed in hot water and then rubbed until perfectly dry, and then apply iodine, lubricating oil, or poke root, olive oil or camellia seed oil, and massage thoroughly. Under such conditions a pound to a pound and a half of Epsom salts should be given; they have a cooling and cleansing effect upon the animal's body.

It is well to give her about three pounds of ground oats or bran over which has been poured hot water half an hour before. This has a stimulating effect when in the form of a mash, especially when made of oats, and it helps to remove the placenta. A pair of warm water will be greatly appreciated by the cow, for her system is somewhat exhausted and feverish at this time. In no case should the cow have cold water to drink or be exposed to cold draughts of air. In chilly weather it is well to keep the cow blanketed until she regains her normal condition; gunny sacks sewed together will answer the purpose if there is nothing better at hand.

At the beginning of her milking period the cow should be fed very lightly, preferably bulky and loosening feeds, and as she increases in milk flow her ration may gradually be increased until she is receiving all that she is capable of handling to advantage. It takes from three to four weeks to bring her to a full flow of milk and to the entire of a full ration. There is no other time in her period of lactation that care and judicious feeding have such an important bearing upon her year's record as this. Feed her liberally, but do not over-feed. It is well to have salt so that cows can have free access to it at all times.

NEW POSTMASTERS

President Roosevelt Monday nominated Henry C. Conrad to be postmaster in Wilmington, Thomas L. Mason at Clayton and J. Frank Reynolds at Delaware City. Mr. Conrad succeeds William H. Heidt. The other two are reappointments.

The appointment of Mr. Conrad to be postmaster has been expected for several days. He will take charge of the office as soon as his commission arrives and he arranges the necessary bond.

Mr. Conrad is one of the best-known men in Wilmington. He was born in Bridgeburg, Pa., April 25th, 1852. He was educated in the public schools in Wilmington and at the law under Anthony Higgins. He was graduated from Harvard Law School in 1873 and was admitted to the bar of this county in 1874. In 1879 he was appointed United States Commissioner and supervisor of elections, which places he held for several years.

Corkran and Baker

When the Wilmington Conference of the M. E. Church convened in Pocomoke City early in March, I will be called upon to take action in the cases of Revs. Charles B. Baker and William F. Corkran, who were suspended from the Church nearly a year ago for dabbling in stocks. Although it is not known what action the conference will take in the matter, it is probable that the ministers may be given charges as their suspension of one year ends in the spring.

WASHINGTON LETTER

WASHINGTON, D. C., Jan. 27th, 1906.

CONGRESS is now in a quietest state. It is conceded that the "insurrection" in the House, if it ever had any real foundation, has broken down. The joint statement bill will pass unless something very unforeseen happens to prevent, and the House ratifies the President's ideas more than do the several Senate bills, will go to conference and get trimmed as sure as there is a conference. The Senate is not in the habit of giving up to the House and while there has been some talk of the House "standing pat" on the rate bill, it is not thought that it will. Possibly this estimate of the House status may be wrong, but there will be more chance to tell at the end of next week.

One of the most futile bills of national importance that have been introduced into the Senate for a long time is that of Senator Overman to appoint a commission to study foreign trade conditions with a view to increasing the American foreign market. Now Senator Overman ought to know, everyone else does, that the Department of Commerce and Labor, the Treasury and even the Department of Agriculture are full of the very information that he would send a commission abroad to obtain.

MIDDLETOWN, DEL., FEB. 8, 1906.

NEW POSTMASTERS

The President during the past month appointed four new postmasters in Delaware. The appointments are, correctly we believe, credited to Senator Allee. There has been some kicking in certain quarters about some of them. The first named was the appointment for this town to the vacancy created by death. For this, the son of the deceased was named, and it seem to satisfy everybody here. For the towns of Clayton and Delaware City, the retiring postmasters were re-appointed. These men were originally named by ex Senator Ball, and gave satisfaction at the time of their original appointment. No charges had been made against them, they had made good officials, their pay was only a fair compensation for the work required, and there was no great reason why a change should be made. Nor is there much fault found with them; nor, on the other hand, is Senator Allee given credit for them. But for the City of Wilmington, he decided that a change was best. That was his opinion, and as the naming of the incumbent was a matter for which he should be held responsible, he certainly had a right to his option. We are not authorized to speak for the Senator, nor have we had any communication, direct or indirect with him for many months. He has always been opposed by THE TRANSCRIPT in all matters pertaining to factional matters. But we believe in fighting fair. Mr. Heald made a good postmaster, and all things being equal should have been re-appointed. Mr. Conrad is in every way qualified to acceptably fill the position. He has wide acquaintance with the business and needs of Wilmington, and his ability as a business man, as well as lawyer is unquestioned. While not wanting in any way to detract from the importance of the position, there is no question that the same kind of work is not required of a postmaster of Wilmington, as is required in a country town. There the handling of the mail, the issuing of money orders, in fact, all the details of the office are managed by clerks trained for the special work. The postmaster is merely the executive head, or manager. For this Mr. Conrad is well fitted. We do not think that it would have been proper, as the Evening Journal intimates was done, for the Republicans of New Castle County to have taken part in the fight before the appointment was made, as it was purely a city office, and city influences should have governed, and we would not now have mentioned the matter but for the mis-statements and false representations that have been made for partisan purposes. If we had to make the appointment, we should probably have done different. But the responsibility was on Senator Allee, and we are willing to credit him with doing what he thought was best for the party.

UNCERTAIN

THE TRANSCRIPT is in a way to get a case of swelled head. Two of the metropolitan papers, the Journal and Every Evening endorse the position of THE TRANSCRIPT, on different items in the same week. We hardly know whether to be pleased or displeased. It has been such a long time since either one of them found anything to commend in our views, that we have rather gone along on the idea that we could only do right by opposing both of them. They are usually on the wrong side of a question, that is from our standpoint. We suppose, however, that we will have to believe that for once they are able to see the right; if they have not changed their minds since this was written.

SUNDAY TRAINS

THE TRANSCRIPT learns with pleasure that the management of the Delaware Railroad has decided to inaugurate Sunday passenger trains in the near future. We are not advised how many but surely one or two each way every Sunday. This is a decided gain to the people of the Peninsula, who may desire to use them, and it will especially accommodate those former Delawareans now residing in other places who like to visit the old folks for a day or so, but who must be at work on Monday morning. We hope that the spirit may continue to work until a train is scheduled between the one leaving Wilmington at 3.44 and 5.52 P. M.

DEEPER WATERWAY

All Marylanders are now more hopeful than ever that the ship canal will in a few years be an accomplished fact. Eikton would soon experience splendid results from the proposed improvement, and the prominence now given the subject by Congress is gratifying in the extreme. Representative Davidson, of Wisconsin, chairman of the House Committee on Railways and Canals, has submitted to the House a report recommending the passage of the Mudd resolution authorizing the President to appoint a commission to examine and report upon a route for the construction of a ship canal to connect the Delaware and Chesapeake bays. The committee recommends the appropriation of $100,000. The project is one feasibly talked of since the early days of the republic, and for 75 years has been more or less prominent in Congress, members of both Houses appreciating, from a National point of view, that a connection between the two bays would be of vast importance in the contingency of war with a maritime nation. Such a connection would provide a means of concentrating the floating defenses of two bays, and besides this would render more secure the communication between the naval stations of Philadelphia and Norfolk and Washington.

HOW EDITORS GET RICH

A well-known knight of the razor and shears, who has a keen sense of humor as well as keen edged cutting implements about his place of business, cut the following item from a paper published in Spring Valley, N. Y. "It has been figured out after a good deal of study why so many country editors get rich. Here is the secret of success truthfully told: A child is born in the neighborhood, the attending physician gets $10, the editor gives the loud-sounding yelp and the happy parents send off and get $8. It is christened; the minister gets a fee and the editor $30. It grows up and marries; the editor publishes a long-winded flowery article and gets a dozen lines about the 'beautiful and accomplished bride and the promising groom.' The minister gets $10 and a piece of cake, and the editor gets $300. In the course of time it dies; the doctor gets from $25 to $100; the undertaker gets from $50 to $100; the editor publishes a note of the death and an obituary two columns long, lodges and society resolutions, a lot of poetry and a card of thanks, is asked to donate three dozen copies of the paper to be sent distant relatives and friends of the 'dear departed' and again gets $300. Is it wonder then, that so many country editors get rich?"

IN MEMORIAM

In sad but loving remembrance of my dear uncle John W. Appleton, who departed this life January 30th, 1904. Another form is sleeping. Beneath the peaceful sod, Another soul is resting In the bosom of God, Another loved one enamed, Among the peaceful dead, Come, ye blessed of my father To another life been said. Another freed from sorrow. Another freed from care, Another left this world of sin To dwell forever there. In the mansions of the blest Where streets are paved with gold, And the walls are like Jasper And joys are all untold. Shed no sad tears of sorrow. Heave no loud, mournful sigh. Look beyond the cold dark grave, Beyond the deep, blue sky. For he has crossed the river Has passed the golden gates Has laid aside the earthly robe, And with the Saviour waits. He has left this world of pain With Jesus are to dwell He's left us sad and lonely, But Jesus doeth all things well. Good ones he's waiting for you Standing on the golden shore When like him, you cross the river, You'll meet to part no more. His niece, ETHEL.

WANTS CHANGE IN SCHOOLS

Thomas O. Cooper, member of the General Assembly from Wilmington, is in favor of a radical change in the curriculum of the Delaware schools. Representative Cooper has made a consistent study of educational matters, both as a member of the Wilmington Board of Education and of the House Committee on Education in the recent Legislature. He takes the ground that pupils who enter the higher grades of the schools of today are entitled by all means to less of the ancient languages and more of a substantial business course that would fit them for keeping a set of books and transacting ordinary matters of business with intelligence and success. He contends that it is a waste of time and money to force Greek and Latin upon those who have no idea of adopting or entering a professional career.
